The Spring Street Story:

In the 1970’s, Portland constructed a four lane divided highway, Spring Street, destroying a wide swath of the urban fabric. PSA met with City officials and held two design charrettes that have resulted in the redesign of the “highway” to create an appropriately scaled urban street. The removal of the “jersey barriers” in summer 2015 initiated that construction.

Portland Society for Architecture
Helping Portland Build Better